ARTIST STATEMENT:

"A colony of frogs bid Zeus deliver unto them a king. Zeus obliged sending an inanimate log. Upon splash-down, the wooden ruler sat listless amid the croaking masses. Discontent, the frogs demanded a real king. Zeus took a drag off his cigarette and sent a heron. This new king quickly began devouring frogs." The frogs beseeched Zeus for deliverance. He turned his back while rolling his eyes with such force that they scraped the very heavens. Some of the frogs took respite from the misery with taunts and jibes about this feathered chaos. The laughter made life a little more bearable amid the reeds." — Rob Jones
